The point is to know that this is where they can push the boundaries of their abilities. As a beautiful work of art with an expensive frame, car manufacturers spend fortunes framing their latest creations in exotic locations for official photo shoots. But in our minds, racing circuits rank as the ultimate backdrop. Which is why in search of the next automotive photographer feature as part of our ongoing series, we hit the pause button on Bas Fransen Photography. The 30-year-old from Eindhoven works with Mercedes-Benz HQ in his home country of Holland and his pictures have appeared in Top Gear and Evo magazines. But he loves nothing more than to head to Nurburgring and Spa-Francorchamps to hit cars on the road. From the crazy Ferrari FXX K to the extreme Lamborghini Aventador SV, Bas has captured an array of lustworthy cars in an ideal environment pushing the boundaries of its potential. If you like what you see, you can keep up to date with your work via your Facebook page or Instagram page, or by following him on Twitter. Rolls-Royce's Greatest Bespoke Cars 12 Ridiculously Rare Sports Cars NASCAR teams are made up of engineers and professionals who study every aspect of racing from aerodynamics, you guessed it: tires. Tires are one of the most important parts of racing and can mean the difference between winning and a bad day. Let's take a look at a typical race weekend leading up to the green flag for Sunday's Sprint Cup Series. Goodyear chooses what tire to bring to each race track based on data collected from testing and past races. As we've already learned, NASCAR and Goodyear are working together to test and develop tires for specific tracks. Some tires can be used for more than one track. Goodyear often chooses the same tire tracks that share similar characteristics and configuration. For example, Infineon Raceway and Watkins Glen both road courses so Goodyear chooses the same tire for both tracks. Advertising Goodyear mounts and balances all tires using a specially designed tire mounting machine and crews pick up their tires through a rental program. Nationwide and the Craftsman Truck series have tire rules that limit the set of sets of tires teams can use. There's no limit in the Sprint Cup. Each team has a tire specialist who handles tire pressures and controls tire wear. Teams are not allowed to do anything with their tires once they have taken possession. Teams are allowed to trade tires with other teams, but no changes can be made. The only permissible adjustment of the tires is an increase or decrease in air pressure. NASCAR teams adjust the air pressure to improve car handling, which can make a big difference on race day. Teams usually practice on a Friday before a two-round qualifying session. Overall, NASCAR drivers turn their fastest times into new tires. During the two-lap qualifying session, lap times can vary greatly due to tire wear. Drivers usually take their first qualifying round more times than not; their second round is slower. Of course, there are a few exceptions. Sometimes cars don't rely on tire grip so much - Daytona and Talladega are two good examples. Goodyear engineers measure tire temperature and wear and wear and can make recommendations throughout the course of the race. In the 2008 Allstate 400 Indianapolis, Goodyear officials knew before race day that the tires were not wearing properly. Fearing tire shortages, Goodyear brought more tires - tires that were slated to go to Pocono next week. If Goodyear officials don't like what they see during practice sessions, they recommend an authorized air pressure change or advise NASCAR about excessive tire wear due to the camber. Too much camber is spent inside the shoulder tire, a condition that can cause a quick blowout. When teams are selected and Goodyear feels good about the tires, it's time to race. The next part brings everything together when drivers get set to push the boundaries and reach speeds close to 200 mph (321.9 km/h). Nov 9 (Reuters) - The race to create vaccines for the novel coronavirus is reaching a critical stretch, with several candidates that were first out of the gate beginning to release late-stage study data. Pfizer Inc and its partner BioNTech SE said on Monday their experimental COVID-19 vaccine is more than 90% effective based on the results of the initial study, with a much higher efficiency rate than the 50% minimum required by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. Multiple vaccines are likely to make it on the market and success depends on several factors, including immune response, safety and distribution. Reuters tracks the candidates closest to produce the results of this tracker: (Reporting by Christine Soares, editing by Tiffany Wu) The main U.S. equity indices are hovering around all-time highs, and the question that often pops up these days is whether some corporate valuations may be overstretched. However, some operate at the opposite end of the spectrum and may still offer investors untapped opportunities. H.C. Wainwright analyst Ram Selvaraju points to Sorrento Therapeutics (SRNE) as such a company. Selvaraju rates SRNE Buy with a $30 price target, which means a 275% rise to the current level. (To view Selvaraju's story record, click here) What is behind the optimistic outlook? Well, for starters, Sorrento has a stake in two cell-based immunotherapy companies that could value Sorrento shares in the coming months. One is Celularity, a clinical stage cell therapeutic company focused on cell drugs for cancer, infectious diseases and degenerative diseases. Celularity is expected to be unveiled later this year through SPAC's merger with GX Acquisition Corp. The value of the merged company's equity after closing the transaction is approximately $1 billion. Selvaraju estimates that Sorrento's position should be worth $200 million. Another company is NantWest, which recently signed an agreement to merge with ImmunityBio. The transaction is expected to close at 1H21. Sorrento has approximately 8.2 million holdings in a clinically stage immunotherapy company. They are currently worth about $121 million, going to NantWest's current share price. In addition, the analyst highlights Sorrento's growing portfolio of assets, which includes three different treatment areas (non-opioid pain management, oncology and COVID-19). In fact, with Covid-19 ahead alone, Sorrento has taken a broad-based approach and has a long list of diagnostic, prophylactic and therapeutic offerings in the pipeline, with updates likely to come fast and furious. These include two rapid detection tests; COVI-STIX, which the company submitted in December to the U.S. Emergency Use Permit (EUAs) and COVI-TRACE, which Selvaraju claims could be useful at any mass gathering event. We believe that the incentive to facilitate the large-scale and indeed ubiquitous deployment of the COVI-TRACE test is extremely high and governments around the world can try to implement it in their respective regions, noting the five-star rating. Other Covid-19 candidates are COVIGUARD - SARS-CoV-2 Neutralizing Antibody, COVI-AMG - Coviguard Neutralizing Antibody Affinity- Maturated Version, Neutralizing Antibody Cocktail Cov-SHIELD and COVIDTRAP, ACE2 Receptor Decoy, designed to replicate mammalian ACE2 receptor, which acts as the primary portal for SARS-CoV-2 virus to penetrate human cells. It's been relatively quiet when it comes to other analyst activities. In the last three months, only 2 analysts have given ratings. However, since they were both buys, the word on the street is that SRNE is a Moderate Buy. Based on the $25.50 average price target, the shares could climb 219% higher over the next 12 months. Wer passt zu dir am Besten? Jetzt Matches erhalten. 51% Frauen 49% Männer. Investor's Business DailyThe Dow Jones slipped lower amid fears Joe Biden's massive stimulus plan could lead to higher interest rates or tax hikes. The genetically modified strain has been reversed. Looking at the markets as the main opportunity, Raymond James strategist Davis McCourt sees both risk and opportunities in current market conditions. In its view, the most positive is that Democrats won both Georgia Senate seats in a recent runoff vote, giving the incoming Biden administration majority support in both chambers of Congress - and increasing the likelihood of a right to be signed in the near future. More importantly, the coronavirus vaccination program is underway, and reports suggest that Pfizer's vaccine, one of two approved in the U.S., is effective against a new strain of the virus. A successful vaccination programme will accelerate the recovery, allowing countries to relax lockdown rules and bring people back to work. Risks also arise from the political and public health worlds. House Democrats have accepted accusations against President Trump, despite the imminent national shutdown of his term, and this passage reduces the chances of political reconciliation in a highly polarized environment. And while the COVID strain is consistent with current vaccines, there is still a risk that the new strain will develop, which will not be covered by existing vaccinations - which could restart the cycle of lockdowns and recession. Another risk McCourt sees, in addition to the two, would be a sharp rise in inflation. He doesn't believe it, but sees it as unlikely to happen soon... product/service inflation is only really an option after re-opening, so the market feels a bit of bullet proof very soon, and thus continuing the rally, with dems winning GA races just adding fuel to the incentive fire, McCourt noted. Some of McCourt's colleagues are among Raymond James' analyst cadre keeping these risks in mind, and putting them imprimatur on strong dividend stocks. We studied Raymond James's recent calls, and using the TipRanks database, we've selected two shares with high-yield dividends. These buy-rated tickers bring a dividend yield of 7%, a strong attraction for investors interested in using the current good time to create a defensive firewall should the risks materialize. Enterprise Products Partners (EPD) We start in the energy sector, a business segment that has long been known for both large cash flows and high dividends. Enterprise Products Partners is a midstream company that is part of a network that takes hydrocarbon products from wells to storage plants, refineries and distribution points. Enterprise controls pipelines worth more than 50,000 miles, terminals on the Gulf Coast of Texas and 160 million barrels of oil and 14 billion cubic feet of natural gas storage. The company was damaged by low prices and low demand in 1H20, but recovered in part in the second half. Revenue turned around, growing 27% in a row to reach $69 billion in Q3. That figure was year-on-year, slipping 5.4%, but was more than 6% above Q3 forecast. Q3 profit, 48 cents per share, was just forecast, but increased 4% year-on-year and 2% in a row. EPD recently announced the payment of its 4Q20 dividend 44 cents, and marks the first increase in two years. At $1.80 a year, the tax yielded 7.9%. Among the bulls is Raymond James Justin Jenkins, who appreciates EPD Strong Buy. The analyst gives the stock a $26 price target, which represents a 15% increase at the current level. (To view Jenkins's record, click here) In his bullish stance, Jenkins noted: In our view, EPD's unique combination of integration, balance sheet strength and roic track record remains the best in the class. We see epd arguably best tolerated in volatile terrain... Epd footprint, demand growth, project growth and contract ramps should offset supply headwinds and lower marketing results... It's not often that analysts all agree on a stock, so when that happens, pay attention. EPD's Strong Buy consensus rating based on unanimous 9 Buys. The company is an s&#39; amp; P 500 long-term membership and has a reputation as one of the stock market's best dividend rs. AT&T is a real high-cap industry giant with a market cap of $208 billion and the largest network of mobile and landline services in the U.S. Its acquisition of TimeWarner (now WarnerMedia), a process between 2016 and 2018, has given the company a large stake in the mobile content streaming business. AT&T saw a 20% of the 2020 world's best picture. Revenue at 3Q20 was $42.3 billion, up 5% from a year ago in the quarter. On positive notes, free cash flow rose 9% from $11.4 billion to $12.1 billion, and the company reported a net profit of 5.5 million new subscribers. The growth of the subscriber was driven by the introduction of the new 5G network and premium content services. The company has had its reputation as a dividend champion and has made its final dividend return by 2021. The payment at 52 common shares, is in the straight year and annual data of $2.08, giving a yield of 7.2%. By comparison, the average dividend among mutual companies in the technology sector is only 0.9%. AT&T has kept its dividends strong for the past 12 years. Raymond James analyst Frank Louthan sees AT&T's classic defensive value in the stock, and describes T's current status as one of the bad news baked in. [We] believe that there is more that may go right in the next 12 months than can get worse at AT&T. Throw in the fact that the shares are heavily condensed, and we believe this is a recipe for reverse. Big cap value names are hard to come by, and we think investors who can wait a few months for an average rollback. Locking in a 7% yield should be rewarded for buying AT&T at its current level, Louthan said. In line with these comments, Louthan rates T perform(perform) (i.e. Buy) and its $32 price target means room for 10% growth from current levels. (To view Louthan's story, click here) What does the rest of the street think? The idea that the value of stocks is finally about to wake up after a decade-long nap is almost a joke in the financial community. Vanguard's point of view is at least slightly different from that its model shows that investors have been right to evade value stocks, at least until recent years. Our research shows that a value premium exists and that the recent performance of growth stocks can be partly explained by the decline in long-term inflation and the lack of a significant acceleration in income growth over the past decade, the company says. At a time when millions of people are tied up for money and rely on their income tax refund or incentive checks, they have to wait a little longer before they can file their taxes. Zoom stock has fallen about 35% since mid-October, when investors have questioned how much the company's growth rate will push when the economy reopens. (Bloomberg) - U.S. stock futures fell, erasing early gains, as investors assessed the details of President-elect Joe Biden's $1.9 trillion spending bill proposal, which includes $35 billion in aid to states. And that's before the remake of America's bills will come through with an almost certain increase in taxes. Record rises in stocks have stretched valuations to levels not seen in two decades, prompting warnings of a bubble that leads to a rapid sell-off. Automakers around the world are closing assembly lines because of a global shortage of semiconductors that in some cases have exacerbated the Trump administration's actions against key Chinese chip factories, industry officials said. The shortage, which caught much of the industry off-guard and can last for several months, is now causing Ford Motor Co, Subaru Corp, and Toyota Motor Corp, to restrict production in the United States. Automakers affected in other markets include Volkswagen, Nissan Motor Co Ltd and Fiat Chrysler Automobiles. For the second time in a year, hydrogen fuel cell company Plug Power (PLUG) was big news to report. As you remember, it was a $1.5 billion acquisition with the Korean SK Group to build a hydrogen economy for South Korea. This week, it's a lot to build fuel cell vans in France alongside local partner Renault - and while Plug didn't add a price tag to this one, investors still cheered like crazy, sending Plug stock up by more than 22% a day. As a plug on Tuesday, he signed a memorandum of understanding with the French automaker. Through this, the parties expressed an interest in setting up 50 to 50 joint ventures over the next six months to supply French customers with solutions for key fuel cell vehicles with hydrogen fuel, refueling infrastructures and services and to collect 30% of the national market for light commercial vehicles fueled with fuel cells. Renault gives the car production capability, and Plug provides fuel cell systems to make them go zoom! The plug also produces hydrogen refueling systems to refuel vans on the road. Shareholders weren't the only ones pleased with Plug's announcement, and analyst Christopher Souther at B. Riley quickly rushed out of the note to double down on his buy rating on Plug stock, and raise his price target from over 50%, to $79 a share. (To view Souther's story, click here) Calling Renault a strong partner for Plug the continent, where the local market for fuel cell light commercial vehicles is expected to grow from a substantially zero today to 500,000 units by 2030. Souther increased revenues from its long-range forecast for commercial vehicles, respectively. In fact, long before 2030 it is valuing plug 20 times its fiscal 2024 sales forecast. What exactly is the prognosis? Souther didn't say it outright. But the $79 per share price would mean the company's value of just over $3.7 billion for Plug stock, meaning that the analyst sees a new relationship with Renault pushing Plug's 2024 earnings to last $1.8 billion - about six times the increase over Plug's trailing revenue to $308 million. Curiously, this estimate is almost double the $1 billion budget 2024 revenue that Plug itself last promised. And here's another curious thing about Souther's predictions: While there's no explicit putting the number in its 2024 forecast, Souther doesn't give detailed assumptions about what Plug will produce in the near term, predicting full-year 2020 sales and full-year 2021 sales as well. Unlike the average consensus on Wall Street, where most analysts agree Plug did perhaps $329 million in sales last year, Souther thinks the company's revenue was only $291 million. Similarly, consensus estimates for fiscal 2021 put Plug sales at $444 million -- but Souther sees only $419 million. Now, as an analyst is going to predict disappointing results in two straight years that predict sales twice, which Plug himself promises in just three years now is not entirely clear. And why he suggests that investors buy a Plug before what its own admission, see the likely sales frustrations as being similarly opaque. Then again, as Souther himself laments: No matter how expensive Plug stock can be, it's hard to fight secular tailwinds. That's B. Riley's point of view, what does street mean? The current outlook is confusing. On the one hand, based on 10 buys and 1 Hold, share has a Strong Buy consensus rating. But after soaring so high recently, analysts expect shares to cool and forecast a downside of 18% from current levels.
